

The Problem In North Korea

Although it has not yet fired directly into South Korea, North Korea is still an unstable country and a threat to its neighbors, because its citizens lack freedoms, its leader has threatened other nations with weapons, and its military conducts dangerous training exercises that break international law.

- a lot of poverty and starvation
- controlling government
- government does not acknowledge the struggle of the country
- dangerous military exercises and tactics
- extensive nuclear development programs
- no longer a member of the Non-Proliferation Treaty of Nuclear Weapons